Yet in the spirit of taking most of what we have, Premier League festive matches will continue with and without fans within. – Let's look at what we can enjoy. Leicester vs Manchester United [ Unusual for planners, we have a marquee match in an early period of time, which gives Fantrax managers among us two whole confirmed line-ups before their deadline on Saturday. ] That might even be enough to get some West Coast Americans out of bed (or keep them until their 3:30 a.m.) to poacher a plum differential or two. ] United have won all six of their away league games, each time noticing a opposition goal or two before turning the tables. Ole's men have just made things hard for themselves too often this season. After a slow start, there are signs that the Red Devils' attack is starting to click; both Marcus Rashford and Anthony Martial look sharper than at any point, plus Bruno is Bruno. Meanwhile, Leicester's movement and pace will expletive super slow duo Lindelof and Maguire, especially if Jamie Vardy is confirmed fit. Both sides are just as capable of fantastic performances as horror shows, and in United's case, they can be like during a single game. Prediction - Anything is possible, but I'll go with a draw with a score. – Aston Villa v Crystal Palace I'm still waiting for old Roy Hodgson two cans of four solid defensive systems to appear. At the moment the Eagles are giving up a host of chances but looking more likely to score at the other end than we often see. Wilfred Zach seems happy, and on his day just a player brings in this match. Villa play great football from time to time, with Jack Grealish constantly looking the best and best player month after month. Ollie Watkins' luck must surely change soon; how has he not rewarded his owners in recent weeks? Prediction - Open play for me is perhaps a draw points – Fulham vs Southampton Scott Parker is slowly doing a decent job developing his slow Fulham players. They were whipping boys in the first weeks but now look a well-organised side that becomes a handful. The Saints are a fantastically organised team where every player knows and understands his role. With Danny Ings, I'll give the tip of my hat to the old and wise eyes of Ken, who infuriating Theo Walcott a few weeks ago. Theo is my old favourite with his Arsenal days but I have him down as very past him. Watching him back in Southampton, he appears to be final prosperity to his top-level career. With Ings, Theo will play the role of forward, forward, works with Che Adams. I'm still unlikely to go with him, but he's amazing in my thoughts. Prediction - Score a draw again. – Arsenal vs Chelsea We have two sides struggling to different degrees at this stage. Arsenal looked very good during their FA Cup run in the summer but seem to have fallen off a cliff this season. I'm not sure what happened to see such a sudden decline. Arteta has received the support he requested in the summer transfer window and is now under intense pressure. Usually the worst possible opponent for him would be Chelsea. The Blues though have been hit by injuries, so I'm not sure Frank Lampard has found a system that suits all the players at his disposal. James and Chilwell may or may not be out; if not enough it's a big hit. Without them against West Ham the side looked pretty flat to me. Up, tino Werner's form (or lack thereof) is a bad time. He is unsure of himself and desperately needs a purpose; maybe he will be gifted a PC to lift his spirits. Prediction - It should be an away win, but the missing players for Chelsea are changing somewhat. Looks 1-0, 0-0 or 0-1 game for me. – Manchester City vs Newcastle should be a home winning banker. KDB and Raheem Sterling were rested in midweek, and the worst thing for Magpies fans was the sight of a certain Kun-Agouero warming up the bench. He loves the Newcastle massacre and that is what I expect despite this City side wanting to be downgraded. Carl Darlow will be seriously tested. Prediction - Home win by 3 goals. – Sheffield United vs Everton Last year I would imagine scouring Sheffield To pinch at least a point here. This season they just can't get going at all. Nor can they seem to stop the opposition getting a chance after chances. Everton were empty in the League Cup loss on Wednesday, with Richarlison coming out early after being hit in the head. How irises react can affect their legs and minds in this. Prediction - Narrow away win. – Leeds' attacking game against Burnley Leeds is relentless and at times ridiculous. Watching United break the arch-rivals 6-2, one would expect it to beat out the stuffing from them; We'll see. Sean Dyche is an excellent manager and his Burnley side are now starting to show normal form after an awful start to the season. Goals for Ashley Barnes and Chris Wood against Wolves will boost their confidence and they can both be a handful with pumped-out breasts. I don't know what to expect in this. Leeds' smooth attacking play can be stifled by a tough Burnley, or they can make up for the goals again. This seems to be a challenging time to play Burnley and I wonder if they can offer some value twice that many people don't expect. Prediction - Score a draw – West Ham vs Brighton Hammers have surprised a few this season by sitting on a bigger point than the match list suggested they would be after 14 games. Brighton meanwhile are playing well at times but couldn't beat Sheffield and can't keep clean sheets. All look this week, but we have some risky options in Bowen and Benrahma I like the most. Benrahma is a player I waited patiently for to see a break in The 1st team. Greedy and selfish at times, shooting on the court, confident and ambitious, he stereotypes a fantasy footballer. The bench at Chelsea looks like Moyes' tactical move, so Benrahma is likely to be my Fantrax gamble this week; if James is fit, I can even add it to the FPL. Prediction - West Ham home win with Benrahma haul. – Liverpool vs West Brom Klopp men flex muscles. Jose may have thought his Spurs team should have beaten them, but Liverpool won the match late on. This was followed by a 7-0 blitz by Palace that raised eyebrows. Even without VVD, and with a huge injury list this season, the Reds go to the Christmas top of the pile. West Brom will improve under Big Sam but he needs time to set out his approach. He will also need support in the January transfer window. Until we see his impact on performances in the match, the Baggies still have to be up against. For many FPL managers, the captain's tantam will go for the most obvious captain pick of the entire season: the white-hot Mohamed Salah. If you don't have one, then Andrew Robertson, Sadio Mané or an early TAA pickup would be a good shout out. Prediction – Not 7-0, but I think 3- or 4-0. – Wolves vs Tottenham Spurs have done Spurs in the last two weeks. When talked about as a title contender, suddenly it was two defeats and a draw in the last three. Typical spurs. Wolves have three defeats in four, but they beat Chelsea in game-week 13. Minus Doherty, Johnny and Jimenez from the consistent team last season, and with Traore off form, they are a very different Wolves side now. Prediction – Any result is possible, but with both teams needing to end their negative runs, I can see that it's low risk and low points. Maybe 1-0 Jose, Kane poacher effort. – A key point to consider in terms of rotation, keep in mind that six sides (Palace, Leicester, Chelsea, Villa, Everton and Man City) play their game week 16 matches on the 28th, giving them just two days of turnover between games. Of course, owners the likes of Jamie Vardy, Ben Chilwell (already injured), Timo Werner, Jack Grealish, DCL and KDB will cast anxious eyes when the team's letters come out. Even starters can have minutes managed. Game Week 15 in the spotlight will be on city coverage. Neither KDB nor Raheem Sterling played a part in City's 4-1 League Cup win over Arsenal on Tuesday night, so we can reasonably expect them to start against Newcastle. But if Pep finds himself well ahead after an hour, we shouldn't be surprised to see him retain the Stars for the game on the 28th against Everton. John Stones is finally finding form and seems the first choice. Both Dias and Laporte prefer to play the role of left-back, while Stones is the best of the trio playing with He looks city's safest defender to pick looking only at this game Game-week 15 is then easy in my mind. The challenge follows the 11am (British time) Boxing Day cut off. At this point, it's a generalization time for me with the sight of a game-week 18 empty -&gt; game-week 19 double. Hopefully over this weekend you can help me discuss the planning ahead. – Finally we wish all our readers a happy/merry Christmas. Open a bottle or can do something nice and please join us in a virtual FPL &amp; Fantrax Pub NMA to communicate with us in the following. Stail –
